TWIN RIVERS HIGH SCHOOL
BODE, IOWA

DEDICATION

Taking a closer look—at ourselves.

We, the senior class of Twin Rivers High, realize the need to recognize all those who have supported us through these formative years. We recognize, above all, that the tools which will help us succeed must be forged within ourselves. Therefore, we have dedicated this yearbook to the world within us, waiting only for the future to let it be revealed.

SCHOOL LIFE

On August 24th, 1983, the doors to Twin Rivers High School were opened. And just by looking at the calendar of events one could tell it was going to be a busy year indeed.

Sandwiched between football and volleyball games were their respective practices, and Homecoming week was a hectic week for all high school students. There was float construction and skit preparation all culminating in a very impressive Pre-Homecoming celebration to crown Sheila Wichtendahl as Queen and Steve Bennett as King.

While these activities were taking place, the drama department was preparing for the November 5 presentation of Great Caesar's Ghost under the direction of Mrs. Melchert and Mr. Lee. Then came winter-with its early and persistent snow-and wrestling and basketball encountering their grueling schedules of games and practices.

The Speech team, though small, did well when Judy Stalzer and Sheila Wichtendahl placed first in their Duet Mime and went to Storm Lake (Buena Vista College) for the State Level competition.

As spring approached, the annual music department production took off with their interpretation of That's Entertainment, a variety show involving many TR students from all fields.

April marked the month when the long-awaited Easter Break took place, and shortly thereafter the Junior-Senior Prom took place, on April 28th. Despite a never-ending battle to fight higher prices, the Prom Dinner and Dance displayed an impressive show of streamers and a nightclub effect.

Ultimately, the school year leads to graduation. The class of 1984 graduated 24 students, with many of them receiving awards. May 18 marked the date of graduation, and soon the doors were closed on another school.

There were many challenges faced by the students. But with the promise of another year, in school or out of it, there will be an opportunity to see that we all reach an end and find a new beginning.

Autographe

At this time I would like to give mention to those who have contributed to the production of this yearbook. The names may coincide with those listed under the picture of the yearbook staff (page 18), but there is, as could be anticipated, more to the production than meets the eye.

The first note of acknowledgement should, I feel, be given to the Senior Class of 1984 as a whole. The credit is given on a financial note: this year's book appears to have the best chance of meeting its various costs of many of the books produced in the last few years. This is because they were entrusted with time to collect from potential advertisers and basically they were successful.

Other chief contributors to the production of this yearbook include Eileen Jaeger, student editor; Larry Johnson, photographer, and Renee Markman for assistance with copy writing for various sections.

In the upcoming school year, 1984-1985, the yearbook will be produced in a class atmosphere. The change to this format was supported due to the incessant difficulties surrounding conflicts in schedule. Small communities involve their citizens in many ways, often there was not enough time left for working on the yearbook. Hopefully, by having a set time for such production the yearbook can continue to improve and become what it is actually intended to be: an artistic interpretation of the past school year, complete with all its successes as well as tribulations.

Best of luck in the upcoming school year.
